CITY NEWS

Harpers' Monthly and Scribner for March have been received by Cathcart & cleland.

Edward Claffey, three years old, strayed from his home on English avenue yester-day, and was not found for hours. His absence caused the excitement of a first-class kidnapping affair.

Joseph B Walker, tried once for forger; in the criminal court, is having a second hearing to day, the jury having disagreed upon the former trial. The alleged offense consists in altering a real estate deed by Edward Kiler to A. S. Kingsley.

Purchasing the Exposition Grounds.

The proposition for the state to purchase the exposition grounds and buildings for the exposition grounds and buildings for $90 000, with the privilege of redeeming the same within four years, has not met with the encouragement that its projectors anticipated, and the probabilities are the measure will not be favorably acted on by the legislature. The bill providing for such purchase is now in the hands of the finance committee in the senate and of the agricultural committee in the house. The special mittee in the senate and of the agricultural committee in the house. The special committee appointed by the house some days ago to visit the grounds with a view of determining their actual value have not yet reported the result to the house, but the indications are they will place its valuation at a much lower figure than the state board represented. For the information of this committee For the information of this committee the opinion of a number of gentlemen as to the value of the building and grounds, was submitted, among which were the following estimates: J.D. Conditt, ground $180,000, building, $50,00; W. L. Adams, ground $150,000; W. H. Morrison, grounds $144,000; A. Wallace, grounds and improvements $225,000; Ingram Fletcher, grounds $180,000; building, $75,000 J. M. Hume, grounds $180,000, building, $70,000; J. B. Cleaveland, grounds $135,000; J. M. Ridenour, grounds $140,000 building $20,000; J. B. Cleaveland, grounds $140,000 building $40,000; J. Dohn W. Ray, grounds $144,000, building $50,000, building $40,000; building $4 accounted for by those favoring the purchase on the supposition that that these officials would rather have the money in their possession as guardians of the state than expend it the manner indicated. Of the committee, Leeper, Wellborn and Bea, democrats, concluded that a fair valnation of the premises was represented by $70,000, while the other members, Thompson of Howard, and Thomas of Parke, placed it at $150,000. The state board of griculture meets to-morrow and this natter will mainly occupy their time and agriculture attention.

Last evening Patroinen Stevens, Trucks and Looney were suspended from duty by the chief and ordered to await police board investigation.—Stevens because of the Long Branch trouble, Trucks for mischief at the "Stone Front," and Looney by reason of the Panhandle office. Stevens will have a hearing Wednesday afternoon. will have a hearing Wednesday afternoon, but it is understood he has already resigned. Trucks has demonded investigation, and so has Looney. The first says in selfdefense that he visited the "stone front" in company with a friend to recover a horse and buggy, and while there his wife came over and raised cain under the belief he was skirmishing for a mischievous purpose. To-day patrolman Moreau was suspended for absenting himself from his Indianola district, the chief and Captain O'Haver last night reporting themselves unable to find him. It is whispered that to night other heads will be guillotined, and altogether the police outlook is frisky. Moreau will make a rigorous de fense, and Stevens should also do the

What has been Done.

The Indiana legislature, kept up at an expense of $2,000 per day, has twelve working days left, including to-day, in which to pass bills, the regular session closing March 5th. This really industrious body has actually passed eleven bills since the 4th of January, and are more concerned now in clamoring for an extra session than in transacting the business before them. Of the bills which have become laws, all, with one or two exceptions are local in character, and even at this late hour of the session new bills are being introduced which can never be reached in introduced which can never be reached in the regular order of business. The delay in passing any appropriation bills it is believed is being done for the purpose of inducing the governor to call an extra session, but those who pretend to know ineist that Blue Jeans will do no such thing. thing.

Elder Errett's Lecture. The lecture by Elder Errett of Cincinnati at Christian Chapel Saturday evening was deserving of a larger audience than was present, the subject of linsey-woolsey being treated in an interesting spicy and instructive manner. The speaker gave some good advice on influence to the young, who, having no fixed idea of duty or the objects to be attained lead a linsey-woolsey existence. He appealed to young women to cultivate individuality, and then described linsey-woolsey morals and the influence of money in every station in life. Reference was made to woman's mission here on earth, and in conclusion the declaration was made that in the state of the future rewards there will be no linsey-woolsey, but that the saved shall be clad in pure white linen.

Kid Gloves Cleaned. Lest week Miss Mary Hall, on North Mississippi street, attempted to cleanse a pair of kid gloves with sunlight fluid, first putting on and buttoning them around the wrist. While standing near the stove the fluid ignited, the flame reaching the ceiling, but with presence of mind she held her hands out until the fire was extinguished by attendants. The fire was extinguished by attendants. The gloves were uninjured, but upon removing them Miss Hall found the skin upon her hands and wrist scalded, and having the appearance of being thoroughly cooked.

"Crooked" Men. Yesterday evening Captain Campbell arrested Wm. H. Hagan, a notorious "crock," but to day the ragrancy charge was dismissed upon condition that he leave the city by dusk. Charles Milburn aliss "scar-faced Charley," a notorious pickpocket, was pulled by Fisher and McDonald, and to-day he sailed west on the earliest train. L. S. Howard, a pal, went along. It may be added the "crooked" men are rapidly thinning out, and but few now remain.

THE COUNT.

The Decision of the Tribunal or Protests Read by Democratic Senators and Representatives.

Washington, February 19 — At 10 o'clock the house met and took a recess till 10:50, the time being occupied in preparing for the reception of the senate, The galleries were crowded as usual on days when the count is to proceed. Precisely at 11 o'clock the senate arrived.

cisely at 11 o'clock the senate arrived.

The presiding officer said: "The joint meeting of congress resumes its session. The objections presented to the certificates from the state of Louisiana having been submitted to the commission, the two houses have reconvened to receive and consider the decision of that tribunal in writing signed by a majority of commissioners agreeing thereto."

of commissioners agreeing thereto."

It is in language the same as the decisfon given in the case of Florida, with the difference that where the latter recites that "the commission has decided," the words of the present decision are
"the commission has by a majority of

Mr Gibson presented objections to the decision on the ground that the commission had refused to receive evidence which had been offered and had decided that the votes menticiped in certificates 1 and 3 should be counted for Hayes and Wheeler, such evidence to the contrary notwithstanding. evidence to the contrary notwithstanding.
The paper recites at great length the proceedings of the commission but the point of it is the rejection of evidence. It is signed by most democrats in both houses

The reading of the paper occupied just an hour. It was the driest of legal documents, full free itions of var ous forms in which evidence had been in which evidence had been offered to and refused by the commission. No one after the first five minutes made the slightest presence of listening or attempting to undentand it. The hum of conversation prevailed on the floor and in the crowded galleries to such an extent that the presiding officer several times appealed for order and silence Finally when the reading was ended an opportunity was given members who had not yet signed the paper, to step to the clerk's deek and affix their names. This used up more time and added to the uproar.

At 12:45 the joint convention was again called to order and the presiding officer seked whether there, were any further objections to the decision. Senator Wallace presented objections which were read. The argus first, that the decision is in violation of the electoral act in this, that by the act the commission is required to decide whether any and what persons were duly appointed electors, yet the commission refused to examine and ascertain who were duly appointed electors in and by the state of Louisians, and what votes from that state are within the provisions of the constitution of the United States. Second, because the act creating the commission was passed to the end that the commission would hear and examine ivedence and honestly, decide what electors in any desputed state were fairly and legally chosen, whereas the commission refused to hear and consider evidence offered to show that the electors whose votes the commission had decided should be counted were not duly chosen but that they have falsely and fraudulent. whose votes the commission had decided should be counted were not duly chosen but that they have falsely and fraudulently acted as such electors, and also refused to offer to show that the pretended certificates of election were procured by corruption and were wholly untrue

tion and were wholly untrue

Third—The action of eight members of the commission in declining to hear evidence of these and other facts was in violation of the letter and spirit of the act under which the commission was created, and of the spirit of the constitution of the United States. No farther objections being presented the presiding officer announced that the senate would withdraw so that the two senate would withdraw so that the two houses might seperately consider and decide objections.

The presiding officer, having called for other objections to the decision, Mr. Occhiane presented an objection and protest signed by himself and several senators and representatives for the following reasons: First it was not denied before the commission that the Tilden electors in Louisiana had received a large majority of the votes case.

Second it was not denied before the

of the votes cast.
Second, it was not denied before the commission that Wells and his associates, styling themselves the returning board, we gullty of gross fraud in that the certificates given to the Hayes electors were false and fraudulent, or that their action in canvassing the votes was in violation of the constitution and laws of the state.

Third, because the decision is in disregard of truth, justice and law.

Third, because the decision is in disregard of truth, justice and law, and establishes the demoralizing and ominous doctrine that fraud, treachery and perjury can lawfully be used as a means to make a president of the United States against the well-known or easily ascertained will of the people and of the states. This paper is signed by Senators Wallsce, Johnston, Bailey, Kernan, Kelley of Oregon, Saulsbury and other senators and members.

Washington, February 19.—This morning the president was visited by the attorney general, secretary of war and secretary of state, and attention given among other things to the condition of affairs in Louisiana and also to the article in the "Sunday Capital," of this city, edited by Donn Piatt, which was interpreted by government officers as this city, edited by Donn Piatt, which was interpreted by government officers as strongly advocating violence and definite of law, and as such was given very serious attention. Subsequent to the interview of the attorney general with the president Judge Tattsent for United States Attorney Wells, of this district with whom he was in long and earnest consultation in reference to some newspaper article.

It is a serious question whether there is any agreement between the city and the Belt. road company. A city ordinance gives one week in which to reconsider any action, and presumptively no other is legal before the expiration of that week. The Belt road ordinance was reconsidered at the next meeting of council, and as no contract or agree ment exists the legislature is doing gratuitous work in passing any enabling

The Belt road speculators are talking of the great benefit to be had from furnishing sites for manufactories. Successful manufactories grow from small beginnings and are not built up on real estate speculation. It is poor policy to to scatter manufactories in order to sell lots. Where are all the establishments that were started here before the panic? Every one bankrupt. Look at Brightwood, Ingallston, North Indianapolis, Maywood, et al.

THE democrats who opposed the electoral tribunal ought to find consolation in telling their brethren of a good looking boy, about fourteen years old, who was very vain of his appearance. Fooling about a mule one day he was kicked in the face to its great damage. A week or ten days after, when the swelling was going down and he could begin to see, he took a long look at himself in the glass. The sight was not pleasing. Turning to his father, who had watched the proceeding, he said: "Father, do you "think I will ever be as good looking as I was?" "No, my son," cheerfully responded the parent, "I don't think "vou'll be as handsome, but vou'll "know a great deal more."

WHILE there has been a drifting of the would-be aristocracy in this country, north as well as south, toward the idea that work is degrading, that the drone is your true gentleman, the genuine aristocracy of the old world is striving to undo the mischief wrought by the inculcation of a similar idea centuries ago. The Duke of Argyle, father-in-law to the Princess of Lorne, Queen Victoria's daughter, has educated all his younger sons to some business. The son next to the Marquis of Lorne was for a long time clerk in a New York mercantile house. The only son and heir of the Duke of Galierdo, the wealthiest man in Italy, has refused to accept his father's position in society, preferring his position as a college professor. The son of Lord Ribblesdale has become a clerk in the bank of England. And there are not wanting examples everywhere of "nobility going into trade."

A CHINESE society has been formed in San Francisco to secure employment tor its members, oppose coolieism in every form and discourage excessive immigration from the flowery kingdom. The principle is that a certain proportion of industrious Chinamen will be no inharmonious element in our population. They cut themselves off from the Chinese companies and admit no new members except on like conditions of freedom. They declare their become intention to citizens, and to be omitted in the enmity now shown to the Chinese generally. One of the conditions of membership is an oath to fully and truly support the laws of the American government. This is the first step from the condition of outlaws by sufferance toward citizenship that has been taken by these people, and starts a new element in the Chinese question. It will tend to build up two classes of Chinese in California, one of which at least would want to become citizens and, as a consequence, voters under our institution. In this connection the San Francisco Call says: "We do not im-"agine California will be desirous of 'aiding either section in becoming per-"manent fixtures here."

AMEND THE AMENDMENT. One of the proposed amendments the state constitution, now pending in the senate, is intended, and will doubtless to a considerable extent avail, to prevent the adulteration of the ballot box by imported voters. The requirement of a residence of sixty days in a county or township and thirty in a ward or precinct before voting, will make importations an expensive indulgence, and it is only by making it tax a party's pocket too heavily for comfort that it can be stopped. The remedy is direct, practicable and effective, and it ought to be adopted. Whoever opposes it will subject himself to the ineffaceable suspicion that he wants his party to have the benefit of importations, and further, to the suspicion that his party has used them heretofore, and can't succeed without them. If the amendment could be so amended as to retain this indispensable provision, and at the same time exclude from all control of the government those who are not citizens and have no right to a voice in its administration, it would be the most beneficial act of this generation. We copy it in full to call special attention to its language on this point:

'Sec. 2 In all elections not otherwise provided for in this constitution, every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years and upward, who shall have resided in the state six months shall have resided in the state six months continuously and in the county two months continuously, and in the ward or precinct thirty days continuously preceding such election, and every male inhabitant of foreign birth, of the age of twenty one years and upward, who shall have resided in the United States one year and in this state six months, and in the town-ship sixty days, and in the ward or pre-cinct thirty days immediately preceding such election, and shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States conformably to the laws of the United States conformably to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization, if he shall have been duly registered according to law, shall be entitled to vote in the precinct where he may re-

The first clause specifies "male citi-"zens of the United States," the second specifies "inhabitants of foreign birth, 'who shall have declared their inten-"tion of becoming citizens of the United "States in conformity to the laws on the "subject of naturalization." The difference between "citizens" and "inhabi-"tants of foreign birth" is here made conspicuous. One class is composed of "citizens," the other of those who are not citizens at all, and may never be. They are under no legal, though under a moral obligation to be. Every man is at liberty to change his mind in what concerns only himself, and an intention to-day to become a citizen may be propabandoned to-morrow. different as the very verbiage of the amendment makes these classes, they are given the same rights and powers in the direction of the government. The "citizen" who owes it allegiance, military service, affection, and is bound to it by every tie of patriotism, has no more right in it than an alien who owes it no allegiance, no affection, no military duty, who can play traitor and evade the penalties of treason and who has another country and another allegiance. It is abominable. It originated in the demagogism that sent the democracy of 1850 to seek among foreigners recruits to fill the places of those forced from it by its shameless truckling to slavery. It has been a constant offence to justice and a constant obstruction of honest elections. It is a gress and indefensible wrong to the naturalized citizen to give an alien of a year's residence the same rights that he has had to wait five years for, and to hold him to duties that the other is free from. He must stand a "conscription," if one is needed, the other can evade it if he wants to, for he is no citizen here. He is still a subject of England or Germany or France, if he chooses to claim to be And we know that hundreds and thousands dedged the draft during the war, when it would make them discharge the duties as well as enjoy the privileges of citizens. They got all the good, and were under no obligation to bear the burthens of citizenship. It is an infamous discrimination against the naturalized foreigner. It is a foul wrong to the nation. It debases citizenship by making its rights cheap. What need has a foreigner of full naturalization when he can get all it can give him without it, and escape all its obligations too? The naturalized citizen should spit on it, and spurn any man that sustains it.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK There is a dual phase to the situation which brings comfort to those who believe in the republican party and to those who believe in Mr. Hayes-two widely differing elements which united in the last campaign for different purposes. The former congratulate themselves on the triumph of party by any means, their satisfaction being of the nature of a gourmand's with a comfortable bill of fare in sight. Events must show whether or not they get a place at the board. The latter find in it a better promise of the fulfillment of the hopes which induced them to support Mr. Hayes, than at any time since they put their faith in him. These took Mr. Hayes's letter for their platform, and supported him for the belief in the man inspired by that. The perversion of the campaign from real to false issues was disheartening to them. It brought to the front the very element it was Mr. Hayes's mission to get rid of, and seemingly riveted them more firmly than ever in place and power. Had their solution of the disputed presidency been followed, it is doubtful if all the purity of purpose and earnestness Mr. Hayes could have brought to bear would have been sufficient to have rid himself of these old men of the sea. Every event of the campaign, from the convention to the commission. pushed the reform elements of the party with Mr. Hayes as a figurehead, into the silence of respectable obscurity, and brought the cabal who created and personified "Grantism," into the leadership of affairs with the promise of the directorship of the administration to come.

It is no wonder they fought so vicious-ly the establishment of the electoral tribunal, all of them-dyed in the wool and tinctured-Morton, Cameron, Blaine and Sherman. They had the army and navy to consummate their work, and could reap the fruits undisturbed by any efforts the other element could make. These would have had nothing to do in bringing about such a result, and their utmost striving could only be in the nature of a plea, not a demand. And we know from the past how barren of results such pleas would be. But Edmunds, Conkling and Hoar in a few days turned aside the work of years, and nullified the efforts of the last campaign by putting the reform element in the direct line of succession. The element that Mr. Hayes might have wanted to use and not have been able to, has been placed ready for his hand and he can not well do otherwise now, if he wished, than take hold of it. He can not well do otherwise now, if he wished. than live up to the promise of his letter and his life. The way has been made clear for him.

The natural leaders of Haves's administration in the senate are Conkling, Edmunds and Hoar. They have made him president, procured for him the recognition of every law abiding man in every law-abiding land, giving him a moral support and strength without which his four years would have been years of disastrous failures, such as would have followed if the counsels of Mr. Morton and his companions had been listened to and Hayes been made president vi et armis. These new leaders submitted their rights to arbitration and that they have them now by a so-called partisan decision in which they cast votes, does not impugn their fairness. They believed in this method, were willing beforehand to put their claims in the balance; they were willing to hear what was to be said on both sides, and after this hearing that they hold to their first belief is rather a proof of thorough honesty, than

But Mr. Morton contributed nothing to this settlement and logically should reap nothing of its benefits. He opposed it viciously and violently as unfair, unconstitutional and revolutionary, and he stands now in this just where he has always stood on every question with which he has been identified-willing to use and using means to attain his objects, which he denounces as wrong. It is the well defined position of a politician without principle. His eleventh hour repentance should avail him nothing, for he spent the preceding ten hours denouncing the dishonesty of the position which he afterwards took and of course, by his own showing, he is more use for him. He has stood in the way of peace and reconciliation and prosperity for the last half dozen years and more, and never more bitterly and apparently more successfully than in the last campaign. But the current of events has made a new departure. He did not recognize it when it came. He could not see that the north and south could ever unite for a common good. The only country he ever knew was a country at war with itself; his section of it triumphant, the other forever trodden under hoof. Crushed into conquered provinces to be held there by as unscrupulous methods as ever Bothwell and his sinister Scottish prototypes used to taunt a fallen enemy into fresh resistance that they might again grind him down. The only oath of allegiance he ever knew was the oath of enlistment. He expected the freedmen to follow him as their apostle, and he kept them apart by preaching the gospel of hate that they might come untrammeled to his support in each presidential year to further his grim ambition. But his scheme has run itself out, dying in a campaign that was one final concentrated burst of bitterness, and now his occupation's gone. His mailed hands grasp awkwardly at the gentle elements of peace. He does not know how to use them. He will find himself if Mr. Hayes is true to his promises, surrounded by a condition of things against which he fought bitterly and in which he is of uncertain context and relation to any thing.

Woman's Witchcraft.

[William Wirt to his daughter.] want to tell you a secret. The way to make yourself pleasing to others is to show that you care for them. The whole world is like the miller at Mansfield, "who cared for nobody, no, not he, because no-bedy cared for him," and the world will serve you so, if you give them the same cause. Let every one, therefore, see that you do care for them, what Sterne so hap-pily calls "the small, sweet courtesies of life;" those courtesies in which there is no life," those courtesies in which there is no parade, which manifest themselves by tender looks and little acts of attention. This is the spirit that gives to your sex their sweetest charm. It constitutes the sum total of the "witcheraft of women,"

One Good Result.

[Samuel Bowles's Washington Impressions]

This presidential dead-lock has one good result among its many mischievous accompaniments. Neither set of office seekers yet comes to the capital, and the town is more quiet and the hotels more barren than they have ever been before during the month preceding a presidential inauguration, since the spoils doctrine came in and politics became a profession. But the times themselves are changing; there is a real reaction setting in against the spoils system, and one of the surpriss of the country, if Tilden is elected, will be the way he won't turn out officers simply because they are republicans. When the chairman of the democratic national committee dares boldly to say,—as I heard him say, this week,—that if the president of his choice dismisses a faithful, efficient official for no other reason than that he voted for Hayes, he will denounce b th the man and the act, we may indeed hope that the thing we call civit service reform is not altogether a myth and a dream. One swallow does not make a summer, it is very true; but I hear the fluttering of a good many brids of this species thus early in the season.

A London letter on English tippling says: The American habit of "treating" does not prevail here. An Englishman sees no reason why one man should pay for another's beer, any more than for his breakfast or postage stamps. I could not learn that the national tippling habits led to confirm intemperance, in any marked degree, among the well-to-do classes But I attach no value whatever to this fact as an argument in favor of the moderate use ab argument in favor of the moderate us of wine or beer in our feverish American life. In such a humid climate and easy life. In such a humid climate and easygoing existence the appetites do not kindie so readily nor burn so fiercely. If the Blue Lamp Chimneys.

Noted oculists recommend either blue, bluish gray or smoke-colored glasses a protection for weak eyes against the unpleasant effect of red, orange and yellow light. On the same principle, the trying reddish yellow light of candles, lamps and gas, on normal eyes as well as weak eyes can be normal eyes as well as weak eyes, can be pleasantly modified by the use of blue chimneys or globes (or at least of shades for the reflection of the light) colored a light ultramarine blue. A remarkably near approach to a light as agreeable as daylight is said to be produced by a potro-leum lamp with a round wick and a light blue chimney of twice the usual length, the latter causing so great a draught that the petroleum burns with a nearly pure white fiame.

Are often soothed by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, because that scarching corrective completely removes the causes of brain and nerve excitement, which are to be found in derangement of the stomach, and of its associate organs, the liver and bowels. It is a truth which can not be too carnestly insisted upon, that the effect of mere sedatives and narcotics, like bromide of potassium, valerian, chloral hydrate and opium, is less appreciable the longer they are used, and that they can never permanently relieve nervous excitability, because they can not remedy the weakness and organic derangement which lies at its roots. Hostetter's Bitters, however, can and does cure nervous maladies, for the reason already stated. Sick headache, restlessness at night, vertigo, mental heaviness, and depression of spirits, as well as the dyspeptic condition of the stomach, and torpidity of the liver and bowels, which give rise to them, are entirely obviated by this benign alterative tonic. Aching Heads and Uneasy Nerves

Prominent evils in life always provoke the consideration of their cures and contraries. No good man but is impelled instinctively to strive for the bettering of things. One sees no end of evil and misfortune, and no less of physical dirt and personal carelessness. It is well, then, to think of an agent so potent as B. T. Babbitt's Toilet Sonp, than which nothing better can be made by the chemist for toilet purposes and the bath room. The sweetest and purrest oils are exclusively jused in its preparation and it acts on the skin like a charm.

CHAPTER I.

In the BLACK FOREST.

In the midst of the Black Forest, in Germany, lies hidden the picturesque villege of Zorlitz.

The principal building in the village is

The principal building in the village is the little wooden Lutheran church, the only house of worship.

The pastor of this church, a year or two ago, was Herr Brocken, or Father Brocken, as he was affectionately called by his people. He was a kindly, simple-hearted man.

Here he has dwelt twenty years, the father, the pastor and guide of his simple people; here his wife had recently died; and here he hoped to be buried. He was childless, his family consisting of an old housekeeper and a young girl known as

This niece.

This niece of the pastor was the idol of the good people of Zorlitz. She tended the pessants in their illness; she visited the quaint old houses like a sumbeam, bringing with her always warmth and sunshine.

One afternoon in June, at the time we have indicated, our heroine, after making a call upon a sick old woman, began the ascent of the steep hill in the direction of the parsonage. When half-way up the slope, she turned sside into the woods, pursuing a shaded path at an easy pace, swinging her broad-brimmed hat by its pursuing a shaded pain at an easy pace, swinging her broad-brimmed hat by its ribbons from her arm, and carolling a German song in a sweet voice that roused the birds to emulation.

She was about seventeen years of age, tall, alim and graceful, with a beauty unmistakably English, and yet more unmistakably patrician.

This girl with her wonderful beauty, which would have made a sensation in the queen's drawing room, with her exquisite refinement of looks and manner that declared her gentle birth and breeding 'possessed a grandly generous nature, a warm heart, and impulsive temperament, and, withal, a personal magnetism that attracted every one to her.

She had been thoroughly well educated, the good pastor and his wife having gloried in her keen intellect, and in her thirst for knowledge. They had taught thirst for knowledge. They had taught her various languages, music, for which she had a positive genius, drawing and painting, and various feminine arts; but her accomplishments were the least of her her accomplishments were the least of her charms.

The path along which she was walking cme out upon a spring, whose clear pool was shadowed by bending trees. This was a favorite resort of the young girl, and she sat down upon the green bank, the song dying on her lips, and a strange gravity overspreading her face.

"Oh, dear," she said, sighing; "I am so tired of this dear, stupid, old Zorlitz. I wish I could see something of the world outside. I have read of the great towns, of different peoples, of life besides which ours is stagnation. I am growing discontented. Must I live here all my life, and die, and be buried here, knowing nothing of any better existence? If it were not for leaving uncle I'd beg to be allowed to go somewhere as a governess. But I can't leave him, and he will never leave Zorlitz. And yet I'd give half my remaining life for a change—if I might only go somewhere and see something of the world."

Did some mischievous spirit hear her complaint and resolved to grant her wish? For a change in her life was close at hand—a change greater than even her vivid imagination would have dared concaiva

—a change greater than even her vivid imagination would have dared conceive. That very hour was the last she would ever know of commonplace existence. Perhaps it was as well that she could not read the strange future before her, else she might have shrunk from it in targer and might have shrunk from it in terror and misgiving, preferring the safe shelter of the Zorlitz rarsonage in the depths of the Black Forest to the whirling vortex, the perils and troubles lying in wait for her in the great "world outside."

She was still musing discontentedly when a sudden rifle-shot rang out sharply upon the air—a deer went flying past—and a stinging pain in the girl's left arm sent a thrill of faintness quivering theorem has through her.

A low cry escaped her as she realized that she had been shot. That cry was echoed from the horrified lips of two huntsmen, who bounded into the glade, huntsmen, who bounded into the grade, and halted abrupily at sight of her.

"By Jove!" cried one, speaking in the English language. "A perfect Diana, Glenham! And you've shot her!"
The other raised his hand in an imperious ous gesture, commanding silence, and advanced towards the fainting girl, his counterance still wearing an expression of horior, in which were now mingled a deep pity and keen remorsefulness.

The girl had fainted quite away by the time he are reached her. Eliming down his unlucky riffe, the young man devoted himself to her recovery with peculiar gen-tleness and reverence, and with an assiduity that speedily recalled her to con-sciousness. She opened her eyes upon the strangers, blushed vividly, and arose unsteadily to her feet, retreating a few magnificent little beauty in this wilderness! I say, Glenham..."

The girl's pale face flushed scarlet.
"Pardon," she said, speaking in English, with an accent as pure as that of the gentleman, "but I understand English."
The two young men were, for the moment, covered with confusion. Then the one who had been called Glenham addressed himself to the young lady, avowed himself the author of her injury, lamented his own awkwardness, and begged to be permitted to examine her arm to ascertain the extent of her wound, and to endeavor to alleviate her suffering. endeavor to alleviste her suffering.

His evident sorrow, his chivalric courtesy, impressed the girl, who quietly gave assent, and permitted him to examine "Permit me to remedy this de-ficiency. He is Gordon, Earl of Glenham, of Yorkshire, England. And I have the honor to be his very good friend, Maldred Crafton. We came on an exploring and hunting expedition to these wilds, little expecting to find here a fellow country-woman."

woman."
The young lady acknowledged the introductions with a bow, and responded:
"I lear that I can not lay claim to the same nationality with yourself. I am Cecil Rosse, the niece of Herr Brocken, the Lutheran pastor of Zorlıtz."

To the girl, reared in that secluded region, seeing, besides her aged relative, only the rude peasants, of Zorlitz, young Lord Glenham appeared a very demier loved.

His companion, Mildred Crafton, was his intimate friend and distant relative, who possessed a small fortune, was about thirty years of age, and also unmarried. The intimacy between the two men was inexplicable, for never were two persons mere unlike than Lord Glenham and Maidred Crafton. His lordship was too no-ble and unsuspicious to discern the real nature of his kinsman, which was aly and scheming, intensely avaricious and utter-ly unscrupulous. Yet Crafton's exterior was plausible and insinuating; he was singularly gentic in his manners, and his black eyes and swarthy features had been too well trained to reveal the secrets of his soul.

Cecil Resse was not sufficiently skilled in physiognomy to read the characters of these two men. She only knew that she liked Lord Glenham, and with her liking came an instinctive faith in him. As for Crafton, she felt for him a singular distrust and an aversion that was destined to grow and strengthen into a stronger emotion.

An incressed pallor and sudden compression of her perfect lips brought Lord Glenham hastily to her assistance. Her wound was but slight, and when Lord Glenham had completed his small attempt at surgery, and the wounded arm had been well bandaged, Cecil Rossed thanked him courteenely and avowed her intention of hastening home.

"We will accompany you, Miss Losse," said the earl. "No, do not refuse. You are not able to go alone. Lean upon me; else I shall think that you have not forgiven me!"

else I shall think that you have not forgiven me?"
Cecil took his arm and led the way by the forest-path in the direction of her home. A few minutes' walk brought them out upon the steep village street and very near the parsonage. As they entered the little garden-gate, the old house-keeper, Gretchen, came out to meet them with loud expressions of alarm at the evident weakness of her young mistress. She fairly worshiped the pastor's niece, and Cecil forced a smile and disengaged her arm from its support as she said:

"Hush, Gretchen, you will alarm my uncle. I sm not seriously hurt." She hastened to explain the recent accident, and then invited her companions

"Not now," answered Lord Glenham. "But we will avail ourselves of your kind invitation to-morrow. He raised his hat courteously, and waited until Cecil had entered the dwelling with her old servant, and then he led the way down to the village.

At a little distance from the parsonage Lord Glenham haited and looked back, a Lord Glenham halted and looked back, a new light in his eyes, a new glow on his face.

"He loves her too?" thought Crafton, his soul convulsed with baffled fury. 'But he has not won her and he never shall. For I love her too, this patrician beauty of the Black Forest, I love her, and I swear by all that is holy that she shall be my wife. My wife and not his. He will woo her openly, that I can not do, lest he know me for his rival. Yet it shall go herd if I do not undermine him, cause her to refuse him and then win her for my. to refuse him and then win her for my-self. cover how this English-looking and English-speaking young lady happens to be the niece of a German pastor. Ah, my lord, cherish your little fancies, dream your little dreams, while I step in and win the prize before your very eyes.

The next day the young Englishmen called. Their interview with the old pastor was a pleasant one. Cecil was transcendently lovely. Both of the young men were desperately in love with her, and each resolved, if possible, to win her for his wife. for his wife.

They settled themselves comfortably at Zorlitz, hunted in the forest, and visited the parsonage daily. Absorbed in his books, the Herr Pastor paid little heed to the visitors, whom Cecil entertained. June faded into July, and August came and went, and still the Englishmen lingered at Zorlitz. No one but sharp-eyed old Gretchen suspected that they were the lovers of "little Cecil," or saw the change in her young mistress.

"She loves the English lord," the old woman said to herself, well contented.

be driven to earn her own living, as I have often feared!"

It was plain to Crafton that the young earl was the favored lover of Cecil, but this conviction by no means dampened the ardor of his own love, or caused him to desist from his suit.

"I shall win her!" he said to himself, grimly. "I can work and wait. In spite of any obstadle in my path, in spite of Glenham's beauty, rank and wealth, in spite of the fact even that the girl loves him and dislikes me, I will win her! I devote myself, mind and body, heart and devote myself, mind and body, heart and soul, to the task—but if I should fail—as I shall not—I would utterly destroy the girl before any other should possess her!"

The hard, evil look in his eyes attested As the month of August drew to a close, Lord Glenham began to make preparations to quit Zorlitz, as he had to return home to keep his engagements with a party of guests whom he had invited to spend the month of September with him at his shooting-box in the Scottish Highlands. On the eve of his departure called upon Herr Brocken, avowed his love for Cecil, and asked for her hand in marriage. The old pastor was deeply moved, and after considerable hesitation, revealed to the young nobleman a secret which affected him profoundly. On re-covering from the shock, he remarked:

"Does Cecil know her history?"

"No; I have not dared yet to tell her."

"Then keep it a secret still from her. She must never know it. And give her to me, Mein Herr, if she will marry me, and let me guard and protect her—"

"You are generous, my lord, but this

"You are generous, my lord, but this can not yet be. You shall not marry her on a generous impulse. Besides, she is too young. Go back to your own country for one year, leave her to me, and if, anone year, leave her to me, and if, another summer, you still love Cecil, come and claim her. But now you must not speak to her of love. She is but a child—she is only seventeen."

Lord Glenham was forced to acquiesce in the old pastor's decision.

Cecil was called in, and the earl took

Cecil was called in, and the earl took leave of her in her guardian's presence. His lordship's tongue was silenced upon the subject of love, but his eyes told the tale his lips had been forbidden to utter, and the girl's soul thrilled under his worshiping gaze.

"I am going away, Cecil." said his lord-ship, with a tenderness he could not re-press. "I am going home to England, but press. "I am going home to England, but I shall return next summer. Good by,

I shall return next summer. Good-by, Oecil—good-by, my darling!"

The sorrow in her sweet eyes robbed him of his self-control. He caught her to his breast and showered kisses on, her pure young face in an irrepressible agitation. Then, gently putting her from him, he wring the pastor's hand and dashed from the house.

An hour later Lord Glenham and Mal-

An bour later Lord Glenham and Maldred Crafton left Zorlitz on their way to England, the latter promising to himself a speedy and secret return.

That evening, as the good old pastor sat alone in his study, meditating upon the great event of the day, the door opened and old Gretchen came in, bearing in one hand a lighted candle, in the other a small packet upon which was impressed the London postmark.

The pastor tore open the packet as soon as Gretchen had retired. Two English banknotes fell upon his knee, and a folded sheet of paper, upon which he saw handwriting, followed them.

The old acho'ar started, recoiling, his gentle face growing troubled and perplexed.

"A letter?" he muttered. "The first letter I ever received from Cecil's former guardian. I have received fifty pounds from him every year, but never a scrap of writing before. What has he to say to me? Does he intend to take the child from me? Is the long mystery of fourteen years to be cleared away at last?" Berr Brocken unfolded the mysterious Berr Brocken unfolded the mysterious letter, a strange agitation quivering through all his nerves. He believed himself to stand upon the threshold of the solution of the strange mystery of Cecil's origin. A blur obscured his vision. He removed his spectacles and wiped them with a trembling hand. Then he spread out the sheet of paper, his eager old eyes fairly deveuring its contents.

The letter, as he noticed after reading 't, was written upon plain white paper, without water mark or imprint of any sort whatever. The hand writing was coarse, and slanted backward with an evident attempt at disguise. There was no date to the letter, which read as follows:

"Here Brocken: It is now fourteen

the letter, which read as follows:

"Herr Brocker: It is now fourteen years since I left with you the little nameless child whom you agreed to bring up, and in all that time I have never written a line to you, nor have I heard from you directly, but I am aware that the child is, unfortunately, still alive. I have remitted regularly to you for her support, the sum of fifty pounds per annum. I remit that sum herewith as usual in bank of England notes. As she is now about seventeen years old, and quite able to make her own way. I shall not send any nore money for her, as this is the first it will also be the last communication you will ever receive from me.

you will ever receive from me.

I suppose that she has been brought up, in accordance with my instructions, as a German peasant girl. I suppose, also, that she is contented with her lot, since she has never known any other. If she should mar-ry some wood-carver of your people, then my best wishes for her welfare will have herewith. Neither she nor you will ever hear from me again."

There was no signature to this epistle. Herr Brocken read it over the second time and sighed heavily.

"The unknown guardian washes his hands of Cecil," he muttered. "All connection between the girl and her early pest is now completely severed. She will never solve the mystery, will never know her origin. I almost wish that I had not sent Lord Glenham away and yet I could not do otherwise. According to the tranot do otherwise. According to the tra-ditions and usages of the world, a girl like Cecil, no matter how great her beauty, genius, and goodness, is no fitting wife for a great lord."

The door opened while his eyes were riveted on the paper, and Cecil came in slowly, half-shyly.

The pastor made a movement to put the letter in his desk, but changed his pur-letter in his desk, but changed his purpose.

"My dear," he said, "you seem somehow less of a child to me than usual tonight. My heart is heavy and sore with many burdens. Shall I lay them upon your young shoulders?"

The tender young face at once grew stronger, with a grayity and courage that touched the old scholar.

"I did not know that you were bearing secret burdens, uncle," said Cecil. "Let me help you. De you need money?"

The pastor glanced at the two banknotes on his desk.

"No, dear, it is not any fear of poverty that troubles me," he said, gently. "I feel strangely weak. I realize to night that I am growing old. I may not live another year, and there are things you ought to know. I will tell them to you new. Cecil, this handsome English lord asked me to-day for my consent to address you as your suitor."

The girl blushed and paled, and her eyes glowed with a swift and dazzling splendor.

eyes glowed with a swiit and dazzing splendor.

"What did you say, uncle?" she whispered after a little pause.

"I bade him wait a year. I told him that you were too young to marry."

"He loves me! He loves me!" Cecil said to herself softly, her glorious young be uty radient as a star. "And he is coming back next year! Oh, uncle, I am the happiest girl in all the world tonight!"

The old paster sighed and stroked her hair with a shaking hand. A great struggle was going on within him. At last a lock of decision settled upon his careworn features, and his trembling hand resting on Cecil's head he told her her history as far as he knew it. He also informed her that he had told it to Lord Glenham, and that it seemed to make him love her all the more. He then handed her the letter from her unknown guardian, closed his eyes and leaned back in his chair. His face looked singularly worn and sorrowful in the dim light, and their was a weariness in the drooping features that told of exin the drooping features that told of ex-treme physical weakness. No one marked the rapid change of expression in the young face at his knee, the passionate anguish in the sweet eyes, the tense lines about the lovely mouth, the bitterness, horror, and despair indicated in all her perfect features. perfect features.

"My good wife wrote out the history of your coming here," he said, "and here it is. We both signed it. And the good wife, who was clever with her pencil, made that night, after your guardian's departure, a sketch of his face. Here it is. It can perhaps do you no good but as the man might have been your father, we preserved it for you."

Cecil seized the paper eagerly, and stared at the picture with great devouring eyes.

It represented a young man with a fair English face; a heavy cruel mouth; small blue; eyes, the left one having a peculiar droop; and with a large mole on the left cheek. The face was harsh, cold and unpleasant, and Cecil shuddered as she studied it, feeling a quick sense of repulsion towards it.

studied it, feeling a quick sense of repulsion towards it.
"Do you think that he was my father?" she sked.
"The good wife thought not. But he might have been. Men can be very cruel to their own flesh and blood when they are supremely selfish. Keep the picture, dear. And now, Cecil, we must say goodnight.

Cecil knelt down beside him, and he laid his bands on her head and blessed her. Then he embraced her tenderly, as she arose, and dismissed her.

The old pastor leaned back in his chair.

His long, scanty locks fell around his ven-erable face, and his eyelids drooped wear-"Poor little Cecil!" he said to himself, "Poor little Cecil!" he said to himself, yet without seeming to realize his words. "I seem to have the gift of second-sight to-night. A terrible future yawns before her. Poor little one! God shield her!" When morning dawned he still sat in his easy chair, but his head was thrown back, the gentle smale was frozen on his features, which were rigid as marble. The old pastor had gone to join his good rife. He was dead, and Cecil Rosse was oft alone in the world to meet the perils left alone in the world to meet the perils in store for her!

The grief of Cecil, when, the next morning, she discovered the old pastor sitting dead in his chair, was indescribable. She felt that she was now indeed alone, and without a guide in the world. But old Gretchen, and all the neighbors comforted her, and by the time the funeral ceremonies had ended, and the affairs of the pastor's estate had been settled, she had recovered her usual elasticity of spirits and had resolved upon her course, which was to go to England, accompanied by Gretchen, and see if she could not find some trace of her family. As they set out, old Gretchen, looking back at the forest-village through her tears, muttered:

"I hope that we ain't rushing straight into trouble! And yet a creeping feeling comes over me that there are dark days ahead! I wish! I could read the future!"

A regular graduate of medicine, has been longer engaged in the special treatment of all Chronic diseases than any other physician in Indianapolis, as city papers show, and all old residents know. Experience insures success, and it is self-evident that a physician treating thousands of cases every year attains to that degree of skill so necessary in all old long-standing and chronic cases, and which enables the Doctor to absolutely cure recent cases in a short time. Dr. D. will be glad to see any one suffering with disease. A friendly talk and his opinics, costs nothing. Confidential consultation fifts and invited, personally or by mall. Office central, yet retired. Hours from 9 A. M. to 8 P. M.; Sundays, 12 to 1 P. M. No fees are demanded until a cure is effected. Patients pay for medicines only as cure proceeds, and remedies can be sent everywhere by mail or express. Pamphlets free. No. 39 Kentucky Av., Indianapolis, Ind.

Ross, Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. Siddall were appointed a committee to use their influence in obtaining the passage of the liquor bill now pending in the senate.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The senate went into committee of the whole Saturday afternoon and adopted the following substitute for the 13th article of the constitution: Section I. No political or municipal corporation in this state shall ever become indebted in this state shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to an amount in the aggregate exceeding two per centum on the value of the taxable proyerty within such corporation, to be accertained by the last assessment for state and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount given by such corporations shall be void: Provided, that, in time of war, foreign invasion, or other great public calamity, on petition of a majority of the property owners in number and value within the limits of such corporation, the public authorities, in their discretion, may incur thorities, in their discretion, may incur obligations necessary for the public pro-tection and defense to such amount as may be requested in such petition.

The remainder of the session was occu-pled in receiving and disposing of the reports of committees.

HOUSE. At the afternoon session Saturday bills were passed authorizing sheriffs to serve warrants in any county of the state; amending section 24 of the fee and salary act; defining libel and filing penalty therefore; exempting benefits, claims and enterest of widows and children of members of Masonic and other societies from claims of creditors; authorizing allowances in aid of sgricultural societies; legalizing certain acts of the town of Noblesville.

TO-DAY'S SESSION.

There was evidently no quorum in the senate but no call was made. Senator Stockslager introduced one new bill, No. 319 to amend the school law in some trifling particular, in regard to school lands. The committee on fees and salaries sub-mitted reports on two bills and the rest of the session was devoted diligently to the first reading of house bills. In this line a good half day's work was done. The house had no morning session.

Alleged Horse Thieves.

Alleged Horse Thieves.
Saturday night Patrolmen Harris and Williamson returned from Bellefontaine, Ohio, with Ginn and York, who are arrested for stealing horses belonging to William John Wallace and John Groesch. To-day before the Mayor examination was continued, owing to absent witnesses. York is an ex-preacher, and yesterday preached to the central station prisoners, while the other has less sanctity and answers the description of the man prisoners, while the other has less sanctity and answers the description of the man who committed that mysterious murder in the edge of Hamilton county some weels ago. There is also a report that both are wanted to answer a safe robbery in Ohio, and altogether it appears that Harris and Williamson have made an important capture. The officers were handsomely entertained by the Bellefontaine authorities.

Yesterday noon Harvey B. Vance, grandson of the late Harvey Bates and son of the late L. M. Vance, committed suicide at his mother's residence, 272 North Meridian street, using a rifle for a weapon, and the ball passing through his skull and lodging in the ceiling. Death was instantaneous. The family were at dinner at the time, and the deed was not discovered until some time thereafter. The deceased was a young man of 33, unmarried, and for a number of years has been a sufferer with asthma; a disease which baffled medical skill, and from which he could only obtain temporary relief by using whisky. Of late he has been much depressed in spirits, and it was noticable that upon hearing of Dr. Wishard's suicide he remarked, "The doctor has done quite right under the circumstances." Last evening the coroner's inquest determined his death occurred from suicide, and the funeral was ordered for to-morrow afternoon.

DAVID MACY, ESQ.,

President of the Meridian National Bank

It gives me great satisfaction to state to the public that under Dr. Von Moschizisker's treatment and the use of his Remedies, not only has my HEARING greatly improved and my catarrh been cured but my general health has been materially benefited, and I can recommend him to those who need his medical services. DAVID MACY.

From the President of the Indianapolis Sentinel Company.

To Dr. Von Moschzisker, Grand Hotel; DEAR SIR-It gives me great pleasure to say to you that you have succeeded in restoring my son's hearing. I can not tell you how much your success has gratified me.

Very respectfully yours, JOHN C. SHOEMAKER: February 8, 1877.

From C. L. Downie.

With satisfaction I give publicity to the great benefit I have derived from Dr. Von Mosebzisker's treatment in a severe case of catarrh. For over ten years I was unable to breathe through my nostrils; my health was much impaired. I now breathe natural, and other catarrhal annoyances are gradually leaving me. My health is very much . im CHARLES L. DOWNIE. January 22, 1877.

From J. C. Tutt.

Doubtless many of like experience to my own will be inclined to disbelieve what could be truthfully said of Dr. Von Moschizisker's treatment of catarrh. In one week he has accomplished more in my case than other physiians have in months, or in fact at all. The treatment is so thorough that it can not fail of cure if persevered in, and the great relief I feel from all inflammation and pains in 'the head constrains me to make this statement.

Important Fact. Several physicians who profess to treat catarrh tried to cure my case, but failed. Dr. Von Moschizisker's method to treat that disease is the only true one. He in a short time benefited me far above my expectations. EMIL ZUMPFEE, Prof. of Music.

Editorial Testimony,

Indianapolis, January 11th, 1877.

Written by C. H. Henrici, editor and proprie tor of the Indianapolis Deutsche Zeitung: We bear personal witness from our own experi-ence to the great skill of Dr. Von Moschzisker of a very severe c ness and catarri, from both of which we have suffered for years, and have been greatly benefited by his treatment. We earnestly advise all suffering from deafness, catarrh, throat, eye and lung disease not to miss the opportu nity to avail themselves of his skill during his stay in Indianapoas. His offices are at the Grand Hotel.
